Michael Pye belegt: Die Hanse ist das Ur-Modell der globalistischen, reichen, internationalen Händlerfamilien. Zur Erlangung und Sicherung von Handelsvorteilen (Knebelverträge) wurde zuerst bestochen, dann wurden Kriege gegen Nationalstaaten (bzw. gegen deren Adelsfamilien) geführt. Sowie im Falle von Norwegen die Bevölkerung ausgehungert. Lübeck war die Königin der Hanse. Im Machtzentrum der Händlerfamilien ragten dichtgedrängt die damals höchsten Türme hervor wie später in Chicago und New York. Woher stammte wohl der exessive Reichtum jeweils? Meist aus Übervorteilung anderer Menschen. Um es freundlich auszudrücken. Michael Pye zeigt zudem auf, wie die drakonischen Gesetze zur Bekämpfung der Pest zu einer Konzentration der Macht und der Überwachung geführt haben. (Seiten 337 ff., Kapitel: „Die Pestgesetze").

The only FDA approved product for pre-exposure prophylaxis of anthrax infection is BioThrax. The only FDA approved products for postexposure prophylaxis of anthrax infection are antibiotics, which are typically administered over a 60-day period. Antibiotics prevent anthrax disease by killing the anthrax bacteria before the bacteria can release anthrax toxins into the body. However, antibiotics are not effective against anthrax toxins after the toxins have been released into the body and do not kill anthrax spores that may remain in the body for extended periods after exposure. Anthrax spores that remain in the body can lead to infection following the end of antibiotic treatment. Infection also may occur if patients do not adhere to the prolonged course of antibiotic treatment or are not able to remain on antibiotics for extended periods of time."

(29) https://history.army.mil/documents/AbnOps/TABD.htm; Airborne Operations [2-3.7 AC.F] - TAB D; THE LEBANON OPERATION (15 JULY - 25 OCTOBER 1958) The purpose of the operation was to bolster the pro-Western government of President Chamoun against internal opposition and threats from Syria and the United Arab Republic. The plan was to occupy and secure the Beirut International Airport, a few miles south of the city, then to secure the port of Beirut and approaches to the city. The operation involved approximately 14,000 men, including 8,509 Army personnel and 5.670 officers and men of the Marine Corps. While both Army and Marine forces were ordered to Lebanon on 15 July, only Marine units made assault landings. Army forces from USAREUR did not close in Beirut until 19 July. On this date, Force ALPHA, composed of 1 reinforced airborne battle group and the task force command group (1,720 personnel) arrived at Beirut by air. Since combat did not develop in Lebanon, Force BRAVO, a second airborne battle group and the advance headquarters of the task force (1,723 personnel) never left its station in Germany. Force CHARLIE, containing combat, combat support and combat service units, left Germany by sea and air on 19 July and closed at Beirut by 25 July. According to EP 201, Force CHARLIE contained the main headquarters, the task force artillery (2 airborne batteries of 105-mm. howitzers), 1 section of a 762-mm. rocket battery, and the headquarters element-an airborne reconnaissance troop, an engineer construction company, the advance party of the task force support command, an evacuation hospital unit, elements of an airborne support group, and an Army Security Agency detachment. Political considerations subsequently eliminated the 762-mm rocket battery from the operations in Lebanon. Force DELTA comprised the sea-tail of the airborne battle group, including 2 light truck companies, a section of a 762-mm. rocket battery, an engineer construction battalion (-), an antiaircraft artillery (AW) battery, technical service support units, and a military police unit. This echelon left Germany on 26 July and closed in Beirut from 3 to 5 August. Force ECHO, a 90-mm. gun tank battalion, was to move by sea, according to EP 201. Its embarkation was delayed at Bremerhaven pending a decision whether to send one tank company or the entire battalion. Leaving Germany on 22-23 July, the echelon arrived at Beirut on 3 August 1958. By 5 August, all major ATF-201 forces had reached Beirut and the bulk of their equipment and initial resupply had arrived or was en route. By 26 July, the Marines had deployed, in and around Beirut, four battalion landing teams and a logistical support group. All operations had gone according to plan. Stable conditions were maintained until a new government was installed in Lebanon. At 3pm on July 15, 1958, 1,700 U.S. Marines stormed the beaches of Beirut. They were ready for combat, weapons loaded, and backed up by a full 70 warships in the Mediterranean Sea (including three aircraft carriers: the USS Essex, USS Wasp, and USS Saratoga).

McCloy heiratete 1930 die Deutsch-Amerikanerin Ellen Zinsser, eine Cousine von Konrad Adenauers Ehefrau Auguste, die beide Enkelinnen des Industrie-Magnaten Frederic G. Zinsser waren. (39) Helmut Schmidt lässt das gleiche gemeinsame Foto aus seinem Hotelzimmer mit John McCloy in seinem Buch „Weggefährten" (Seite 293, Siedler Verlag der Bertelsmann Gruppe, Berlin, 1996) und in seinen Buch „Menschen und Mächte" (Seite 191, Siedler Verlag der Bertelsmann Gruppe, Berlin, 1987/Jubiläumsausgabe 1999) abdrucken. Bildunterschrift in „Weggefährten": „McCloy stellte dem Jüngeren seine immense Erfahrung zur Verfügung." Im Text auf Seite 292 schmückt Schmidt aus: „Als Hochkommissar habe ich McCloy nur aus der Ferne erlebt. Unsere persönlichen Begegnungen fanden später statt, im Rahmen des New Yorker »Council on Foreign Relations«, dem McCloy als Präsident vorstand und den ich im Laufe der Jahre als SPD-Fraktionsvorsitzender und Bundesminister mehrfachbesucht habe. Später, als Bundeskanzler empfand ich oft die Notwendigkeit, mich des Rates älterer, erfahrener Menschen außerhalb der deutschen Politik zu vergewissern. So habe ich auch mehrfach »Jack« McCloys Rat gesucht". Seite 293: „McCloy sprach nicht im Auftrage der amerikanischen Regierung... Und der Jüngere hat die Ratschläge angenommen." Prinzipiell steht hierin drin, wie elegant der Hase läuft; wer die „Ratschläge" erteilt (Council on Foreign Relations) und wer „die Ratschläge angenommen" hat (Bundeskanzler). Die Rahmenerzählung von Uneigennützigkeit und Wohltätigkeit kann man weglassen. Über den US-Verteidigungsminister, der aus selbst zugegeben erlogenen Gründen (Dokumentarfilm „Fog of War"; Golf von Tonkin-Lüge) tonnenweise Chemie und Brandbomben gegen vietnamesische Kinder, Erwachsende und Greise eingesetzt hatte, schreibt Helmut Schmidt „Menschen und Mächte" (Seite 197) in die Unterschrift des gemeinsamen Fotos: „Durch seinen Einsatz zugunsten der Menschen in den unterentwickelten Ländern wurde Robert McNamara für Schmidt zum Symbol des sozialen Idealismus der amerikanischen Ostküste".

(42) Associated Press (AP), 3. November 1975: „armored personnel carrier to crash through roadblocks in Beirut", Cousins of U.S. lawmaker rescued WASHINGTON (AP) - Two young cousins of Sen. James Abourezk, D-S.D., who were rescued from their Beirut apartment by a Lebanese businessman say they will probably continue their college educations in South Dakota. Nadia Abpurizk, 20, and her sister, Lauris, 19, arrived safely in New York Sunday night after being rescued by a friend of Sen. Abourezk who rented an armored personnel carrier to crash through roadblocks in Beirut. "We were worried about getting them out of there," said Abourezk in a telephone interview from his Washington home Sunday. Abourezk's friend, Ibrahim el-Hibri, made the daring rescue. Friday after repeated calls this past week by Abourezk to U.S. State Department officials, Arab diplomat Clovis Maksoud in Beirut, Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir Arafat, and Lebanese businessmen acquaintances. The young women, students at Beirut University College, said at first they were frightened when street fighting broke out in Beirut, but "afterwards we got used to it." They arrived in New York with six suitcases. They are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Fouad Abourizk of Saint Kilts in the British West Indies. Abourizk is a first cousin of the South Dakota senator. The slight difference in spelling the two names results from the phonetic translation of the common Arabic name "Abu Rizk". Abourezk said his cousins had not decided if they wanted to stay in Washington for a few days or go directly to their parent's home. "There are no colleges in Saint Kitt so they'll have to finish college somewhere and I'd like to get them into a South Dakota school," said Abourezk. (November 3, 1975), (59) Edward Jay Epstein, The Wall Street Journal, 24. Dezember 2001: "Evidently, the virulent Ames strain had been sent from the U.S. to Britain, and, after the U.S. destroyed its stockpiles in the 1970s, samples had to be obtained from the British facility at Porton Downs, specifically from the Center for Applied Microbiology and Research (CAMR). Martin Hugh-Jones, a scientist at Lousiana State University who received a sample from CAMR in the 1990s, recalls that it was marked "October, 1932." So the matching sample traces not only to the U.S. but to Britain. The security of the British anthrax bacteria is complicated by its privatization. In 1993, at the time it was supplying the virulent Ames strain sample, CAMR was partly privatized by the British government through a marketing agreement with Porton Products Ltd. in which Porton sold all its anthrax vaccine. Porton Products was owned by Speywood Holdings Ltd., which, in turn, was owned by I&F Holdings NV, a Netherlands Antilles corporate shell owned by Fuad El-Hibri, a Lebanese Arab with joint German-U.S. citizenship; his father, Ibrihim El-Hibri; and possibly other undisclosed investors.

Privately held, BioPort was formed in 1998 to take over the assets of the state-owned Michigan Biological Products Institute (MBPI) in Lansing, Mich, the only facility in the United States that had been producing the vaccine. BioPort paid $ 3.28 million in cash for MBPI, financing the rest of the $ 25 million cost with loans from the state of Michigan. Eleven days after the sale was finalized, in September 1998, DOD awarded BioPort a $45 million contract to supply anthrax vaccine to the US armed forces. The contract required the government to pay for up to 75% of the cost of the vaccine, even if the vaccine failed to be licensed for use."

(108) Die Familie von Avrill Harriman war grundlegend für den Aufbau der Bundesrepublik Deutschland sowie für den Aufbau der Sowjetunion. Sutton, „Wall Street und der Aufstieg Hitlers", Perseus Verlag, Basel 2008, ISBN 978-907654-69-1. In den USA sind die Harrimans eine der beherrschenden Familien der Demokraten-Partei. Die Bush-Familie ist es ebenso für die Republikaner-Partei. Gemeinsam führten die Harrimans und Bushs die Bank "Brown Brothers Harriman", die Hitler mitfinanzierte; das ist sogar in der britischen Mainstream-Zeitung The Guardian vom 25.Sept. 2014 nachzulesen.

(122) Harry V. Martin and David Caul, in Napa Sentinel, 1991: "Dear Stub: "I am in possession of confidential information that the Army is prepared to turn over Nike missile bases to state and local agencies for non-military purposes. They may look with special favor on health related applications. "Such a Nike missile base is located in the Santa Monica Mountains, within a half-hour's drive of the Neuropsychiatric Institute. It is accessible, but relatively remote. The site is securely fenced, and includes various buildings and improvements, making it suitable for prompt occupancy. "If this site were made available to the Neuropsychiatric Institute as a research facility, perhaps initially as an adjunct to the new Center for the Prevention of Violence, we could put it to very good use. Comparative studies could be carried out there, in an isolated but convenient location, of experimental or model programs for the alteration of undesirable behavior. 'Such programs might include control of drug or alcohol abuse, modification of chronic antisocial or impulsive aggressiveness, etc. The site could also accommodate conferences or retreats for instruction of selected groups of mental-health related professionals and of others (e.g., law enforcement personnel, parole officers, special educators) for whom both demonstration and participation would be effective modes of instruction. "My understanding is that a direct request by the Governor, or other appropriate officers of the State, to the Secretary of Defense (or, of course, the President), could be most likely to produce prompt results." Some of the planned areas of study for the Center included:
• Studies of violent individuals.
• Experiments on prisoners from Vacaville and Atascadero, and hyperkinetic children.
• Experiments with violence-producing and violent inhibiting drugs.
• Hormonal aspects of passivity and aggressiveness in boys.
• Studies to discover and compare norms of violence among various ethnic groups.
• Studies of pre-delinquent children.
It would also encourage law enforcement to keep computer files on predelinquent children, which would make possible the treatment of children before they became delinquents. The purpose of the Violence Center was not just research. The staff was to include sociologists, lawyers, police officers, clergymen and probation officers. With the backing of Governor Reagan and Dr. Brian, West had secured guarantees of prisoner volunteers from several California correctional institutions, including Vacaville. Vacaville and Atascadero were chosen as the primary sources for the human guinea pigs."

One might even regard Meese as the de facto National Security Advisor in 1981, since the person actually bearing the title that year, Richard Allen, reported to him. Five years later, then-Attorney General Meese may well have saved Reagan's presidency. On November 25, 1986, he took over a White House press briefing after his boss announced the resignation of National Security Advisor John Poindexter and the dismissal of NSC staffer Lt. Colonel Oliver North. Meese provided the results of an initial White House inquiry after newspaper reports surfaced of clandestine U.S. arms transfers to Iran and illicit support for Contras fighting against the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. From 1970 to 1975, Dr. Earl Brian served in Governor Reagan's Cabinet. In January 1981, Meese became Counsellor to President Reagan. In 1981 to 1982, Brian served in the White House as the chairman of a task force which reported to Meese. When Meese joined the Reagan Administration, Brian was the controlling shareholder in Biotech Capital Corporation. Biotech controlled Hadron, Inc., a company which specialized in integrating computer-based information management systems. This was the company which tried to buy INSLAW. Mrs. Meese bought stock in Biotech's first public offering with money borrowed from Edwin Thomas, soon to be an aide to her husband. Brian lent Thomas $100,000 for the purchase of a house in Washington. Mrs. Meese later bought stock in American Cytogenetics, another Brian company."
(139) Wobei Brian mit den Iranern verhandelte, die US-Botschaftsgeiseln so lange festzuhalten, bis Ronald Reagan überraschend im Oktober kurz vor der US-Präsidentenwahl in Umfragen vorne liegt und danach den Amtseid ablegen kann. So geschah es: Genau eine Stunde nach seiner Vereidigung trat Reagan vor die Fernsehkameras und verkündete die weitere „Überraschung": Die Geiseln sind frei. Die 444 Tage Geiselhaft der US-Botschaftsangehörigen in Teheran waren eine Blamage für den amtierenden Präsidenten Jimmy Carter.

At the reaction rates cited by the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases (USAMRIID),\220\ the anthrax vaccine program, when implemented across the entire 2.4 million member force, could produce 31,200 systemic reactions and up to 93,600 severe local reactions. Recently, the Army Surgeon General conceded that, ``Systemic events occur [illegible] 5 to 35 percent of anthrax-vaccine recipients.'' \221\ At the range of systemic reactions found by DOD in the Tripler Army Medical Center active surveillance study, the AVIP could generate over 1 million systemic reactions, many thousands of which will require medical management and treatment.\222\

(177) Der Irak-Krieg wurde für zwei Jahre und auf eine andere Lüge verschoben. Diese andere Lüge ist mit dem Hochhalten eines angeblichen Anthrax-Röhrchens von US-Außenminister General Collin Powell im UNO-Sicherheitsrat 2003 verbunden und bekannt. Der deutsche BND hatte mit dem falschen Zeugen "CURVEBALL" Colin Powell die Vorlage gegeben. Die Lüge war der Regierung Schröder (SPD)/Fischer (Grüne) bekannt, doch sie sagten es nicht. Ihr Sprachrohr, der deutsche UNO-Botschafter Gunter Pleuger, gab im ARD-Interview vor laufender Kamera zu: „Wir wussten, dass die Aussage von Colin Powell im UNO-Sicherheitsrat 2003 nicht der Wahrheit entsprach und sagten es unmissverständlich auch unseren amerikanischen Partnern." Auf die Nachfrage des Journalisten: „Aber warum haben Sie dies nicht öffentlich gesagt?" Antwort des Spitzenbeamten Gunter Pleuger: „Ja, aber das hätte bedeutet, dass man desavouieren (bloßstellen) würde; das tut man einfach nicht!" Lieber eine Million Tote im Irak (BodyCount IPPNW) in Kauf nehmen, als den „guten Ton" gefährden und die Machthaber bloßstellen. Das ist kriminell.

„Die DNA-Sequenz des Milzbrandes, der 2001 mit der US-Post verschickt wurde, ist bekannt geworden und bestätigt den Verdacht, dass die Bakterien ursprünglich aus einem US-Militärlabor stammen. Die veröffentlichten Daten verwenden Codenamen für die Referenzstämme, mit denen der Angriffsstamm verglichen wurde. Der New Scientist kann jedoch aufdecken, dass die beiden Referenzstämme, die mit dem Angriffsstamm identisch zu sein scheinen, höchstwahrscheinlich aus dem US Army Medical Research Institute for Infectious Diseases in Fort Detrick (USAMRIID), Maryland, stammen. Die neue Arbeit zeigt auch, dass in zwei Proben einer Milzbrandkultur, die nur drei Jahre voneinander getrennt sind, erhebliche genetische Unterschiede auftreten können. Das bedeutet, dass der Milzbrand des Angreifers nicht über viele Generationen hinweg von seinen Vorfahren am USAMRIID getrennt wurde. Die neue genetische Sequenzierungsarbeit wurde vom Institute for Genomic Research in Rockville, Maryland (TIGR), und dem Team von Paul Keim an der University of Northern Arizona in Flagstaff durchgeführt. Vor den Anschlägen hatte das TIGR mit der Sequenzierung eines nicht-pathogenen Derivats des „Ames"-Stammes von Milzbrand aus der britischen Bioabwehr-Einrichtung in Porton Down begonnen. Zufällig hat der Anthrax-Angreifer einen pathogenen Ames-Stamm verwendet. Also fügte das TIGR im Januar die Bakterien, die vom ersten Opfer des Anschlags, dem Journalisten Robert Stevens aus Florida, isoliert wurden, zu seinen Sequenzierungsbemühungen hinzu. Belastende Beweise: Die Idee war, subtile Unterschiede zwischen den beiden Genomen heraus zukitzeln, die die Quelle des Angriffsstammes identifizieren könnten. Eine vollständige Sequenzierung schien notwendig, da genetische Unterschiede bei Milzbrand bekannter-maßen schwer zu finden sind. Doppelt sicher: Die Stämme aus den Kooperationslabors scheinen sicher die Stämme B, C und D zu sein. In diesem Fall war einer der Referenz-Ames in Keims Sammlung, der aus einer Kühltruhe in Porton Down stammte, die ihn wiederum von USAMRIID erhalten hatte. Eine andere war eine Kultur, die direkt vom USAMRIID kam, und die letzte war vom Dugway-Testgelände der US-Armee in Utah. TIGR-Sprecher und andere Quellen haben erklärt, dass Keim bei keinem der in seinem Labor getesteten Marker Unterschiede zwischen dem Angriffsstamm und dem Referenz-Ames in seiner Sammlung finden konnte. Die Tests, über die in Science berichtet wird, machen dies nicht besser. Einer von B und C ist also Keims Porton Down/USAMRIID-Referenzstamm. Der andere ist wahrscheinlich die Kultur direkt von USAMRIID, da der Referenzstamm von dort stammt und seither in einer Gefriertruhe gelegen hat. Stamm D scheint also aus Dugway zu stammen. Der Unterschied zwischen D und dem Angriffsstamm ist nicht groß - es gibt

36 Adenine in einer Reihe, statt 35 - aber Keims Team hat sich doppelt abgesichert, indem es diesen Teil des Genoms des D-Stamms sequenziert hat."
„The DNA sequence of the anthrax sent through the US mail in 2001 has been revealed and confirms suspicions that the bacteria originally came from a US military laboratory. The data released uses codenames for the reference strains against which the attack strain was compared. But New Scientist can reveal that the two reference strains that appear identical to the attack strain most likely originated at the US Army Medical Research Institute for Infectious Diseases at Fort Detrick (USAMRIID), Maryland. The new work also shows that substantial genetic differences can emerge in two samples of an anthrax culture separated for only three years. This means the attacker's anthrax was not separated from its ancestors at USAMRIID for many generations. The new genetic sequencing work was done by the Institute for Genomic Research in Rockville, Maryland (TIGR), and Paul Keim's team at the University of Northern Arizona at Flagstaff. Before the attacks, TIGR had started sequencing a non-pathogenic derivative of the "Ames" strain of anthrax from the UK biodefence establishment at Porton Down. It happened that the anthrax attacker used a pathogenic Ames strain. So in January, TIGR added the bacteria isolated from the first victim of the attack, Florida journalist Robert Stevens, to its sequencing effort. Incriminating evidence: The idea was to tease out subtle differences between the two genomes that might identify the source of the attack strain. Full-blown sequencing seemed necessary, as genetic differences in anthrax are notoriously hard to find. The teams found plenty of differences between the two strains, as they now report in the journal Science. They then took these "marker" stretches of DNA and tested them against five other samples of Ames anthrax, looking for differences - or incriminating similarities. One, from a goat that died of anthrax in Texas in 1997, differed at four markers, proving that the markers can reveal divergence among anthrax lineages. But ironically, none of the other four - identified only as A, B, C and D - differed at all from the attack strain at any of the new markers revealed by sequencing. However, two, A and D, did differ at one marker – a stretch of repeated adenines on pXO2, one of the two DNA plasmids that give anthrax its virulence. That marker had already been discovered by Keim and reported at a meeting in June 2001. "It may be the most polymorphic site in the genome," Keim told New Scientist. Strain A can immediately be ruled out as the attack strain as it is missing a plasmid, and is non-pathogenic. The identity of the strains apparently identical to the attack strain - B and C - and strain D can be deduced as follows. In February, Keim told New Scientist: "We can distinguish among different Ames accessions. These are from collaborative laboratories and related to genetic work we have been performing over the years." "Doubly sure: The strains from the collaborative labs appear certain to be strains B, C and D. In that case, one was the reference Ames in Keim's collection that came from a freezer at Porton Down, which in turn had got it from USAMRIID. Another was a culture that came directly from USAMRIID, and the last was from the US Army's Dugway proving ground in Utah. TIGR spokesmen and other sources have stated that Keim could find no differences between the attack strain and the reference Ames in his collection at any marker tested in his lab. The tests reported in Science are no better at doing this. So one of B and C is Keim's Porton Down/USAMRIID reference strain. The other is likely to be the culture directly from USAMRIID, as the reference strain originated there and had since languished in a freezer. So strain D seems to have come from Dugway. The difference between D and the attack strain is not great - there are 36 adenines in a row, instead of 35 - but Keim's team made doubly sure by sequencing that part of the D strain's genome."

(221) STORYLINE: Workers at a publishing group in Florida will undergo a second round of blood tests after a second employee was diagnosed with the deadly inhaled form of Anthrax. Ernesto Blanco, a 73 year old mail room worker is in worsening condition with the same illness that killed one of his coworkers. Last week health officials reported that his situation was improving, Monday however they said he is infected with the inhaled Anthrax that is, in most cases, fatal. American Media Inc. headquarters, in Boca Raton, has been quarantined since last week, after Anthrax spores were found in several locations inside. Florida Governor Jeb Bush, the President's brother, held a news conference Tuesday with an entourage of other state officials to quell fears and dissuade would-be pranksters. State health officials said there are no other cases of Anthrax infection as of yet, but that more testing will be done to bolster those conclusions. The Governor stressed the importance of being on aware of ones surroundings during these times, and immediately reporting any strange packages to the authorities. In Delray Beach, a man believed to be one of the hijackers in the terrorist attacks visited a drug store in late August for medication to treat a burning sensation in his hands, a pharmacist says. (234) NATIONAL CORONAVIRUS RECOVERY COMMISSION | A PROJECT OF THE HERITAGE FOUNDATION: "Saving Lives and Livelihoods: Recommendations for Recovery", 19 Mai 2020
(235) Slow the spread of the coronavirus while expanding testing, reporting, and contact tracing. Follow CDC guidance on social distancing and other mitigation efforts until new cases begin to decline for at least 14 days. Increase diagnostic testing for COVID-19 and immunity. Also, resources should be made available to regional public health departments to undertake and expand testing, reporting, and contact tracing of those who may be in contact with confirmed COVID-19 cases. Returning to work and slowing the spread of the virus are necessarily intermingled challenges. A sound public health strategy not only helps to reduce illness and mortality associated with the disease, but also helps to mitigate the long-term economic effects. Similarly, many companies and manufacturers have demonstrated strategies that make it possible to continue operating safely and build resiliency. Business leaders are essential in the work to proactively establish safe practices and models for how we can save both lives and livelihoods. Work and workplaces are central to American life not just for the sake of the economy, but also for families, communities, and individual well-being. Extreme shutdowns and social distancing measures are creating high unemployment and putting significant pressure on communities and on individuals. Health policy should focus on constraining the spread of the infection, treating and quarantining the sick, and protecting those who are most vulnerable - not on shutting down American life. Economic policy should focus on durable policy solutions and regulatory relief where government has become a barrier to solutions. Americans need paychecks more than they need stimulus checks.

(236) Continue to build the science. Increase the availability and rapidity of new diagnostic tests while supporting the acceleration and introduction of proven therapeutics and vaccines. There is much we yet do not know about the nature of the virus, its transmissibility, its effects on the body, and its lethality. Important epidemiological questions remain, and work is ongoing to develop faster, more accurate testing to improve and expand our knowledge. The public and private sectors, academia, and international partnerships are needed to advance knowledge and drive solutions. Critical policy reform is also necessary to empower the private sector and reduce regulatory barriers that frustrate innovation and access to health care. Fifty recommendations address hospital capacity; regulatory streamlining of scientific research, manufacturing, and deployment of vaccines, therapeutics, and disinfectants; access to nonessential medical care; information communication; mental health; and the im-provement of epidemiological understanding.

(242) Der Verein Deutscher Rat für Wiederbelebung - German Resuscitation Council (GRC) hat am 09. April 2020 eine neue Leitlinie herausgegeben. Bei der Wiederbelebung soll aufgrund von angeblicher Gefahr von Aerosolen mit SARS CoV-2 auf die Atmenspende von Ersthelfern (medizinisches Fachpersonal) und Laien verzichtet werden. Auch in der aktualisierten Form vom 24.04.2020 verweist der Verein darauf, auf die Atemspende als Eigenschutz verzichten zu können. Auch hier ist dringender Handlungsbedarf zur Aufklärung: Es gibt KEINEN Studienbeweis, dass SARS CoV-2 die Sterblichkeit von Ersthelfern oder Laien bei der Wiederbelebung signifikant erhöht. Es ist unerlässlich, der Bevölkerung die Angst vor COVID-19 durch Atmenspende zu nehmen. Eine aktive Aufforderung zur Unterlassung der lebensrettenden Maßnahmen und unbelegten Weitererzählungen ist unzulässig. Wir benötigen faktenbasierendes Handeln. Erst die Beweise, dann die Änderung. Daher forderten die Ärzte-für-Aufklärung im April 2020 öffentlich eine sofortige Rücknahme der Änderungen der GRC-Leitlinie zur Wiederbelebung.

(266) August 23, 2010 The Honorable Chief Judge Royce C. Lamberth
United States District Court for the District of Columbia
333 Constitution Ave N.W. - Washington, DC 20001
Dear Chief Judge Lamberth:
Pursuant to your Federal Court Order, the Amerithrax Expert Behavioral Analysis Panel is now submitting its Final Report. Panel Members remain cognizant that materials related to this report remain sealed at this time and therefore we have maintained strict confidentiality regarding their contents. This Report is submitted without dissent and represents a consensus of the views of all Panel Members.
We would like to acknowledge the tremendous guidance that we have received from leaders who have been responsible for serving on recent major independent panels and commissions. Former Secretary of the Army John 0. Marsh, Jr., former U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III, and former U.S. Senator Charles S. Robb have all provided us ·with the benefits of their past experiences. Their guidance in assisting the Panel with their own "lessons learned" has been of inestimable value. As a consequence, the Panel remains in their debt. Throughout this process, the Panel has also been fully aware of the tragic consequences of these attacks on victims and their families. As a tribute to them and with humility, we have consciously attempted to focus on recommendations we believe to be most important, and whose implementation can make the greatest difference toward preventing a similar attack in the future.
Respectfully yours,
Gregory Saathoff MD - Executive Director - Critical Incident Analysis Group - University of Virginia School of Medicine
(267) https://med.virginia.edu/ciag/home/the-history-of-ciag/: "During this same time period in the mid-1990's, Dr. Greg Saathoff of the University of Virginia was asked to serve on a commission organized by the U.S. Attorney General. The commission was asked to develop a process by which the Federal government might better access outside resources in the private sector during national crisis. It proposed the creation of an outside Conflict Resolution Specialist position. The specialist would act as a liaison between the FBI's Critical Incident Response Group (CIRG) and outside experts. Because of his background and experience in crisis consultation with the Federal government, Dr. Saathoff was asked to serve as the specialist, and accepted that position. Soon after accepting the liaison position, Dr. Saathoff was contacted by the Michigan State group. It was clear there was a common purpose between the group and the newly created FBI position. As a result, the Critical Incident Analysis Group (CIAG) was brought to the University of Virginia. Dr. Saathoff took on the role as the Executive Director for CIAG."

(320) As a young man, John M. Forbes attained to a crucial position with the Perkins opium-trading syndicate in China: personal secretary and confidential agent for Wu Ping Chien, or "Houqua", the Mandarin head of security for the British East India Company in China, who performed the identical role of native gang leader and intercessor for the American criminals as he had for the British. Houqua treated Forbes as his adopted son, allowing him to acquire vast wealth from Houqua's donations in addition to Forbes' accretions from trading as a partner of the Perkins firm. On one occasion Houqua gave Forbes $500,000 to hold and invest for him in American stocks.
After converting the China fortune into U.S. railroad holdings, Forbes capitalized on his China connection in a rather spectacular fashion. The 1857 crash and depression flattened business fortunes throughout the United States, but Forbes retained his holdings with a $2 million personal loan from the Baring Brothers bank, British financiers of the East Indian empire. The magnitude of this bailout in present-day equivalents is so high as to beggar the imagination. Forbes' dominant American financial position was thus assured with the same type of direct British patronage as bad Boston China trader George Peabody twenty years earlier. Peabody was operating a London banking house in 1837 when he was warned in advance by his British friends of their decision to withdraw credit from worldwide markets and thereby depress commercial values; so he was fully liquid and ready to pounce on the American properties rendered bargains by the British move. Thus established, Peabody boot the transatlantic banking concern which, with the inclusion of Junius Morgan and his son J.P. Morgan, became the overlord of American finance in the late nineteenth century. A.A. Low's uncle, William Henry Low, was the senior partner in charge of Russell and Company, the firm which bought out and expanded the Perkins syndicate and brought the Boston Brahims' opium trade to its greatest heights. When John Murray Forbes returned to Boston, A.A. Low took over Forbes' job as personal secretary and confidential agent for Houqua, and was likewise treated as his adopted son."
